

THE DINING ROOM

This room would have been used for dining, private gatherings, a parlor for gentlemen to gather in as well as place suitable for women travelers to eat or socialize. There is no host/hostess, one would just sit down at a table even if other seated were friend to meet. Looking at the Bill of Fare on the wall -the menu of the day the guest would decide to eat. Served on a wooden trencher and eating with a spoon and knife, the hungry guest would be satisfied.

Today -This room is presented as a four-star restaurant of 1796. It should be noted that foods would be prepared based on availability and the cook's mood.

This space is also where the Lighting Program is usually presented.
